

Volume 1 | Issue 1 | April, 2021

www.sabujeema.com

SABUJEEMA

An International Multidisciplinary e-Magazine

LEARNING FROM COVID-19

- Shakib Akram Khan

editorsabujeema@gmail.com

www.facebook.com/sabujeema.sabujeema

www.linkedin.com/in/sabujeema-e-magazine

Learning From Covid-19

[Article ID: SIMM0010]

Shakib Akram Khan

Delhi Technological University, New Delhi.

We can cross any hurdle with mutual cooperation, developed collective spirit, great social responsibility and implementation of preventive measures. For overcoming any pandemic, we need to successfully eliminate outcomes and reduce its negative impact. After defeating a crisis, everyone must realise their mistakes, shortcomings, problems, alertness to respond a crisis and regular work on combating it. We have to be ready and prepared for facing new challenges as pandemic will repeat every 100 years.

The two most decisive factors in our everyday lives are social activities and morale and they are remembered in time of emergencies. There is a need to boost people's spirit and healthy attitude in time of uncertainty, panic, fear and there is a need to take special measures. We need to influence each other with positive and calm attitude in this period. Supporting elderly and our beloved parents must be our priority. This is note from my side to everyone including me and as going through it I wonder: is there any other side of a coin? I would like to share some strategy and thoughts which will surely help everyone. Washing hand should become a norm, whether virus is present or not. We should build multi policy response for tackling such dangerous pandemic.

We should learn to appreciate nature. We should preserve nature and realize the beauty of nature.

We should always be prepared like war. Like, tony stark in avengers believe. War doesn't mean only guns bomb. War means disturbing the cycle in life of common people.

The bottom line is every country in this world must build a robust plan when a crisis occurs- a plan that is creative, disciplined and, above all, sensitive. Common people are most affected by these kind of pandemics, we must take a step ahead and provide help in whatever way we can.